Lumiere Skincare — Instagram Feed Post:

Brand Safety Score: 6 Out of 10

I think, it's okay but has some noticeable issues. The overall style is clean and minimal, which is good, but there are a few things that don't look good.

- The "Glow With Confidence" headline sticks out too much, it doesn't match the rest of the design and feels like it was made by a new designer with no experience.
- The green bubble shapes around the bottle don't add anything meaningful, they just feel like filler.
- Saying "award-winning" without saying who gave the award can make the brand look careless.
- The product illustration is fine but generic, it doesn't really stand out, especially for a premium skincare brand on Instagram.

Overall, it's on the right track but needs more polish to feel truly premium and consistent.

Lumiere — Brand Safety Violations Test:

Brand Safety Score: 1 Out of 10

This AI creative image is a serious problem and shouldn't be published anywhere.

- The claims like "Cures Acne in 24 Hours" and "Removes 100% of Wrinkles" feel too extreme and are illegal in most markets, not just marketing.
- The "#1 Best Serum in the World" line has no proof or source, which could get the brand in trouble with regulators.
- The "Clinically Proven" results are confusing, especially when combined with disclaimers. It tries to sound scientific but also says it might not work, which kills trust.
- Using by L'OREAL without permission and naming competitors directly is legally risky.
- The design itself, pink background, yellow splats, all-caps headlines, and a huge discount feels cheap and untrustworthy, not premium.

Overall, this creative is a total compliance and brand disaster.

Noir Espresso — Mostly On-Brand, Minor Issues:

Brand Safety Score: 5 Out of 10

This creative has real potential. The dark brown and gold look premium, and the circle illustration gives the brand a unique identity. Listing the coffee specs is smart, it shows expertise and honesty.

But there are some issues:

- The line “An amazing cup from Yirgacheffe” feels weak compared to the rest of the precise copy.
- “12 bags remaining” is risky, if the number changes later, it could be wrong and damage trust.
- The layout feels split; the top and bottom don’t flow together. For a premium product, the design should feel seamless, and right now it doesn’t. The alignment also needs fixing.

Overall, good bones, but it needs more polish to match the brand’s premium image.
